Old Maids

LL girls should marry when they can. There's naught more useful than a A man. A husband has some faults, no doubt, and yet he's good to have about; and she who doesn't get a mate will wish she had one, soon or late. That girl is off her barr, I fear, who plans to have a high career, who sidelate. That girl is off her bar, I fear, who plans to have a high esters, who sidesteps yows and wedding rings to follow after abstract things. I know so many ancient maids who in professions, aris or trades have tried to cut a manlike swath, and old age finds them in the broth. A loneliness, as of the tomb, enshrouds the spinsters in its gloom; the jim crow honors they have won they'd sell at seven cents a tom. Their sun is sinking in the west, and they, unloved and uncaressed, must cavy, as the bleakly roam, the girl with husband, hearth and home.
Get married, then, Jemima dear; don't fiddle with a cheap career. Select a man who's true and good, whose head is not composed of wood, a man who's sound in wind and limb, then round him up and marry him. Oh, rush him to the alter rail, nor heed his protest or his wall. "This is," you'll say, when he's been won, "the lost day's work I've ever done."

The Herald's News Service

THE HERALD in depending for its Mexico news service (leased wire day and night) upon the very thoroughly organized service of the Associated Press, both as to Mexico news and Washington news. The Herald also enjoys the cooperative service of the local news bureau of the A. P., but the basis of the thorough local news service is, as always, the energetic work of a trained and experienced force of local news gatherers who do not need to be told what is news or to submit to censorship outside the office.

To keep the record straight, it may be worth noting that the editor of The Herald has not been visited by any committee; that no protest by local authorities has been brought to the editor upon any matter connected with the handling of the news of the day, or anything else; and that the policy of The Herald is directed by the men who own the paper, and will continue to be so directed.

Therefore the great public, which is dependent solely upon The Herald for full, fair, impartial, legitimate, and uncolored news, may take fresh assurance that the news service of The Herald has not been impaired and will not be impaired by any attempted interference from outside The Herald organization.

On the other hand, the public does not need to be reminded that no person or group of persons in El Paso have greater material interests at stake in El Paso than have the owners of The Herald, who, needless to say, require no reminder by others of the responsibilities assumed in publishing a daily newspaper.

Editions will continue to be issued as the news develops and as the news may justify extraordinary service to the public.

Nine editions daily are absolutely required in order to catch the various mails and deliveries. These editions (beyond the three regular city editions) are given to the El Paso public only when the news situation demands it, and additional ones are issued as circumstances justify.

When there are no important new developments no extra editions will be issued locally; otherwise the public may rest assured that every important item of news will be given out by The Herald first, most fully, most accurately, and without blas, suppression, or distortion to serve any special interest.

Health reports from the southern states show that the stock family friend of the "good old times," malaria, is on the decline. The decline is due, health officers say, to a general intelligence as to the responsibility of the anopheles mosquito and his consequent merciless assassination.

A Boston clergyman once said that one of the most effective sermons for temperance was delivered by John L. Sullivan when he met defeat in the ring. He held up his hand and exclaimed, "Gentlemen, booze done it."

A Negro elevator boy in a New York apartment house discovered a fire at 3 in the morning ran his elevator up, awake everybody and saved everybody. He carried 18 families down and worked so fast and so continuously emptying his building that he fell to the ground exhausted when the last load was down. Another case of very simple, adequate heroism and at 3 in the morning too, when seeing and knowing and doing just the right thing comes harder than at later or

Admirable Domestic Order

L PASO and Juarez equally have reason to congratulate themselves upon the perfect domestic order being maintained during this time. tension. The action of the Juster authorities in closing the port at night and closing the resorts is a most commendable precaution against accident; the troops in Juarez are holding themselves in fine restraint, and public order in Juarez is perfect. There has not been the least disposition to molest any visitor, and no hostile feeling, even incipient, is to be discerned.

Watchfulness prevails on both sides, but that is really more for the purpose of preventing any possible outbreak by irresponsible and unorganised bodies, than for any reason based upon official international relations as such.

The Spanish-Americans in El Paso, numbering, with refugees, at least 25,000, have conducted themselves with splendid self restraint. Among some of the more agnorant, fear seems to prevail that there would be some danger to them in case could be further from truth. These people are just an safe here as they would be in Canada.

And even if that most unfortunate possibility, an armed clash, should occur, the Spanish-Americans residing here, so long as they themselves remained orderly and neutral, would have the same protection as the Americans, and would have absolutely nothing to feat.

El Paso expects all persons within her borders to keep the peace and remain neutral and quiet, now and in case of any extraordinary contingency arising. El Paso, in such event, would count as her friends all who declined to contribute in any way to disorder; and to those who kept the peace, the same protection would he extended regardless of nationality or race.

It rests very largely with the people right here on this border, on both sides of the river, whether we shall continue in amity and good neighborly relations, or allow hostility and bitterness to upset good judgment and destroy friendship. Certain it is, that if any wrong is to be committed against the peace of these communities, it will have to start with others than the Americans, whose sole desire is now, as ever, for peace so long as that peace can be honorably maintained.

A scientific theory describes Venus as a timeless planet. This bright and levely star turns always the same face to the sun and rotates in a circle and therefore has neither seasons nor day and night. How can there be any changes to mark the lapse of time?

It would be a pity not to hear from Col. Roosevelt every so often, but the last word from him that he has shot the rarest bird on the continent, a curucul with heterodactylus feet, is very reassuring. Roosevelt is Roosevelt and himself always. No other president we have ever had has been so enthusiastic an expresident. The amount of fun he gets and the smoke he makes are remarkable.

Dickens's Tattycoram, who had a fearful temper, used to be admonished by her kind protector to count 100. It gave a little time before the explosion and either warded it off entirely or decreased its violence. Another London doctor urges folks to keep their tempers, meaning not to get explosively angry because anger increases the work of the heart 72 foot pounds a minute and shortens life.

M 10H has been said in the Birthday corner about making better use of the family of observation, particularly with reference to the living, growing things about us; but there is another direction in which we ought to exercise these powers where we are at present very lax, and that is in the matter of noting how names are spelled. Some people seem to think it makes no difference whether a name is spelled just right or not, but it does, as you may find out some day when a legal question is involved.
